answering questions

Our class field trip to the zoo turned out to be a little more wild than I had thought it would be! My teacher, Mrs. Myers, told us just how important it was to stay in our groups with our parent chaperone. I never meant to break the rules.

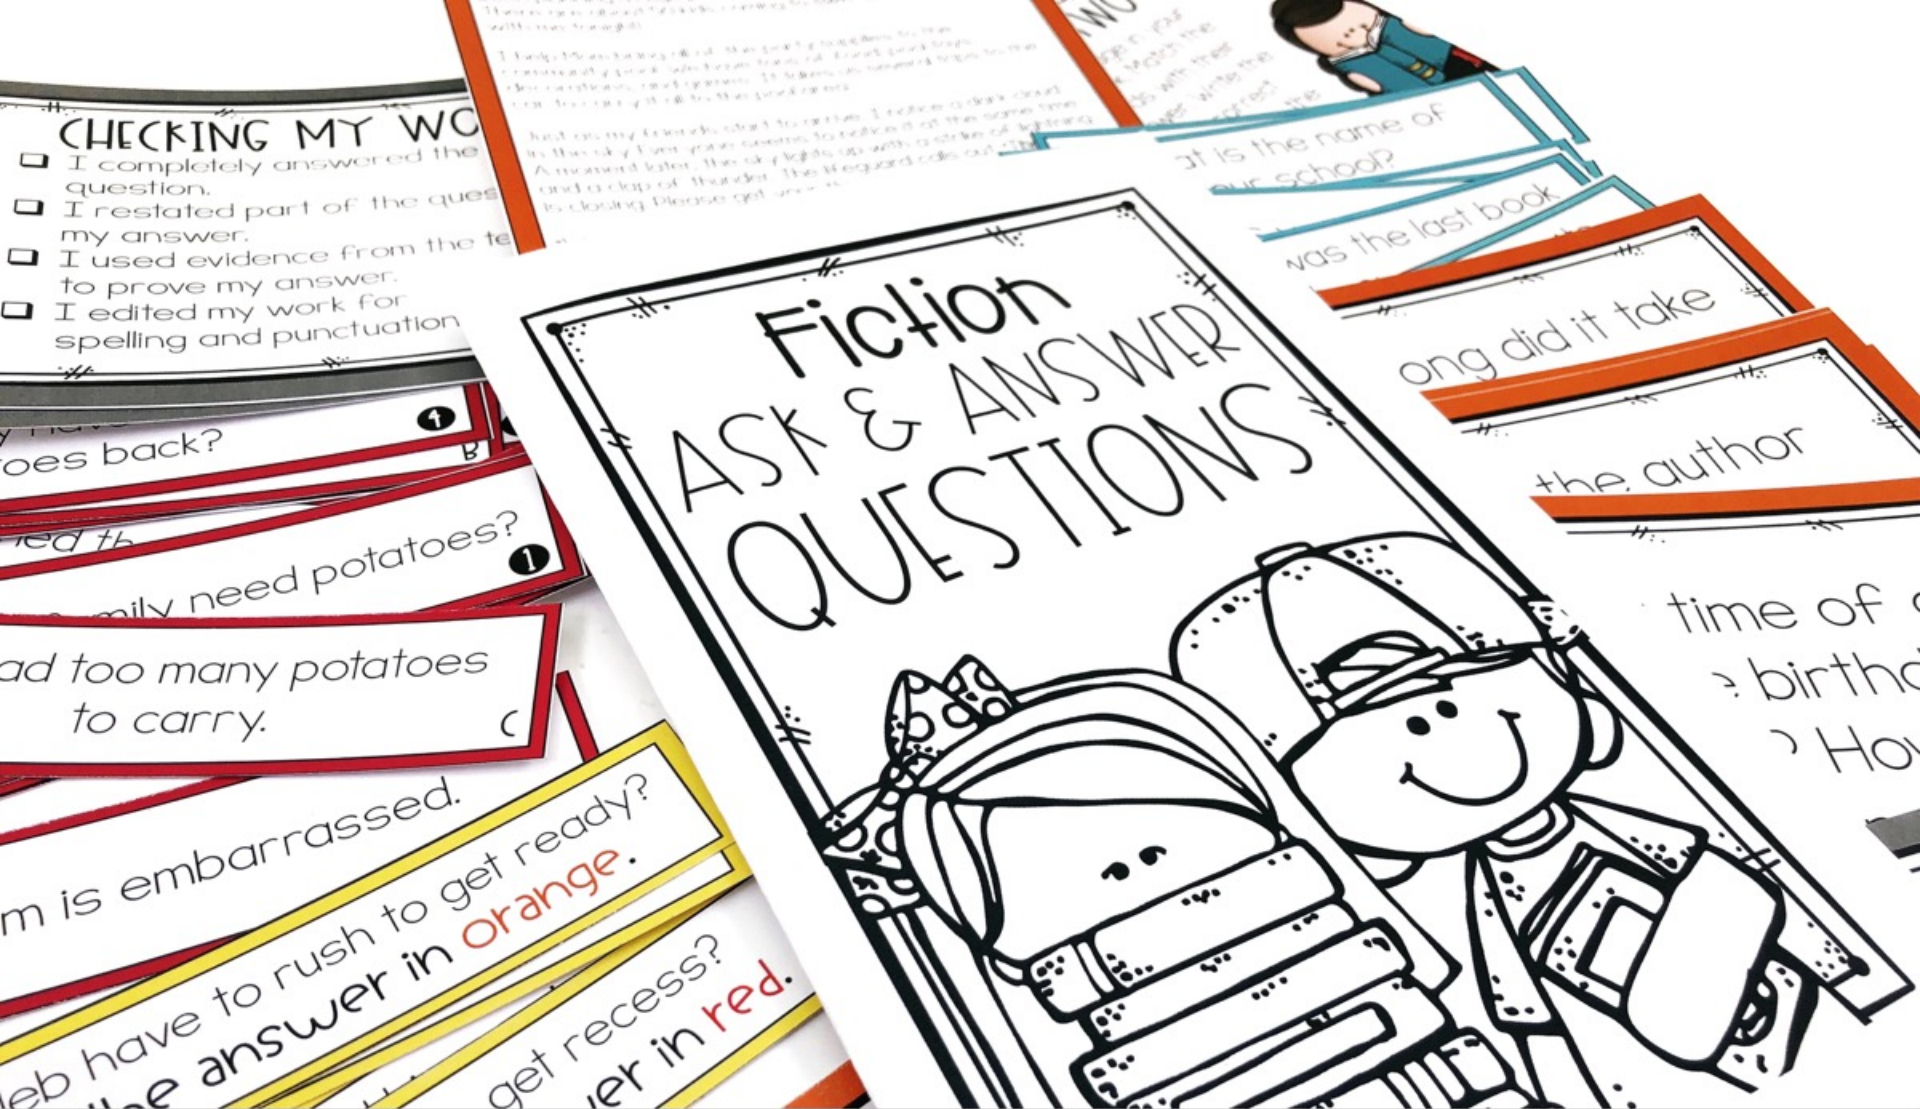

My group consisted of myself, Chad, Kira and Mrs. Barton. We were at the polar bear exhibit. The polar bears seemed to be putting on a show for us! They were swimming and playing together with a plastic ball.

I must have been distracted by those bears, because when I looked behind me for Mrs. Barton, I realized that my group was gone. I called for them. I walked to the zebra exhibit that was nearby, but they weren't there. I started to panic.

I was sitting on a bench thinking about how much trouble I was going to be in when I saw Chad running towards me. "There you are! Come on! We are about to close for the day!"

Chad was just happy to have the group back.

"Dang! I forgot to buy the potatoes for dinner tonight," she heard her mom say.

Mira wanted to help. She grabbed a grocery bag and ran to her neighbor's house.

"Do you have any potatoes that we can have for dinner?" she asked when Mr. Jenkins answered the door. He gave her a sad look and went to the kitchen to grab the potatoes for her.

Mira went to every house on her street asking for help. She had so many that she had to bring them home in a bag.

Mira's mom looked surprised when she saw the potatoes. "Where did you get those?" she asked.

"I asked all the neighbors to give us potatoes."

Mom's face turned red as she said, "I know you wanted to help, but now all the neighbors will think we're poor to feed our kids. You embarrassed them back."

It's finally here! Today is my birthday party. Mom has been planning a huge pool party for the past month. There are about 50 kids coming to swim and celebrate with me tonight!

I help Mom bring all of the party supplies to the community pool. We have tons of food, pool toys, decorations, and games. It takes us several trips to the car to carry it all to the pool area.

Just as my friends start to arrive, I notice a dark cloud in the sky. Everyone seems to notice it at the same time. A moment later, the sky lights up with a strike of lightning and a clap of thunder. The lifeguard calls out, "The pool is closing. Please get your things and leave the area."

"What about my party?" I whine.

All of my guests help us load the car with the party supplies. We all quickly get in cars and head to my house.

The house is full of kids! There is noise and food in every room. It is exciting! I find myself enjoying the party even though we aren't playing all of the fun games we had planned.

Next morning, our house is a mess of trash, for a random shoe. It will take a while to clean up, but it was well worth it!

Asking and Answering Questions

It was the first day of third grade. My stomach was a bundle of nerves; that's what my mom would say. The nervousness was a combination of joy to see my friends and worry about the unknown. Would third grade be too hard? Was Ms. Hanson a nice teacher? What if I had to sit at a table with kids I didn't know?

I lined up with the other students outside of room 47. There was a great deal of chatter and excitement happening around me.

"Did you go anywhere for vacation?"

"I'm so glad we're in the same class!"

It was too difficult to focus on one conversation. I saw a face I did not recognize, but she was smiling at me. Walking to the back of the line to greet her, I could see that she was trying to say something to me.
