The doctor keeps saying that the shot will not hurt. Mom keeps telling me that the shot will keep me from getting sick later. I hear them, but I am still nervous! The doctor asks if I am ready. I look at Mom and she gives me a nod. I close my eyes and tell the doctor that I am as ready as I will ever be. A moment later, I hear a wrapper. I open my eyes just as the doctor is putting a Band-Aid on my arm. He's already done! I didn't feel a thing! I can't believe I was so nervous over something so small.

Our class field trip to the zoo turned out to be a great one. I thought it would be! My teacher, Mrs. Barton, had us to stay in our groups with our parent rules.

My group consisted of myself, Chad, and Kaitlyn. We went to the polar bear exhibit. The polar bears seemed so happy. They were swimming and playing together.

I must have been distracted by those cute birds. When for Mrs. Barton, I realized that my group had walked to the zebra exhibit that was really scary. I started to panic.

I was sitting on a bench, thinking about the trip when I saw Chad running towards me. He said, "I want to see the bird show."

I apologized to Mrs. Barton, but she was

Mira went to every house on her street asking for potatoes. She had so many that she had to bring them home in her wagon. Mira's mom looked surprised when she saw the filled wagon. "Where did you get those?" she asked.

"I asked all of the neighbors to give us potatoes," Mira replied.

It was the first day of third grade. My stomach was nervous. The nervousness was a combination of joy to see old friends and wondering how third grade be too hard? Was Ms. Hanson a nice teacher?

I lined up with the other students outside of room 301. I was nervous about the happening around me.

"Did you go anywhere for vacation?"

"I'm so glad we're in the same class!"

Guided Tour

Growing up in Arizona felt like a big and wonderful adventure to Jeremy and his younger brother Lee. Each year when their school let out for fall break, their grandpa took them on trips to explore their home state. The family had been to the Grand Canyon, hiked the red rocks in Sedona, and visited a ghost town.

This year, the boys and their grandpa were visiting the town of Prescott. "What are we doing today, Grandpa?" Jeremy asked as he got dressed that morning.

"We're going to take a guided tour of some buildings from Arizona's pioneer days," he replied. Jeremy and his brother exchanged a look. A tour didn't exactly sound exciting.

Later that day, Jeremy entered a building that just looked like an old house. A sign on the parlor wall said that it was called the Fremont House. A governor had lived there with his family from 1878 to 1881. As he continued to look around, Jeremy's attention was caught by an old wreath of flowers hanging over a blackened fireplace.

"Do you like that wreath?" a woman's voice asked from behind Jeremy. He turned around. It was the tour guide.
